An Adventist Curriculum Needs Assessment:
A Global Survey of Secondary School Teachers

Introduction

Building redemption-oriented schools of excellence (Dulan, 2003), “demands the most devoted, faithful workers and the very best methods of labor, in order that a strong influence for Christ and the truth may be constantly exerted” (White, 1948, p. 721). Although Seventh-day Adventist higher education has long been the focus of the General Conference, Adventist secondary education has received relatively little attention and support. However, recently the General Conference has taken steps to focus on Seventh-day Adventist secondary education.

In 2005 the General Conference Office of Education funded a global needs assessment study as the first step towards better resourcing of information, integration of faith in learning training, and technology for the improvement of Adventist secondary education. The Curriculum and Instruction Resource Center Linking Educators (CIRCLE) was invited to conduct this evaluative study. CIRCLE is coordinated from the School of Education on the campus of Andrews University, Berrien Springs, Michigan. CIRCLE seeks to build awareness of what resources are available and provides a clearinghouse where resources developed from an Adventist worldview can be accessed, and continually added by Adventist educators. CIRCLE has the potential to link Adventist educators who have resources with those who need them, anytime, anywhere.

Setting up the Study

To determine those issues which were of greatest importance to stakeholders, the research team, Glynis Bradfield, principal researcher and Director of CIRCLE, and her research assistants, dialogued directly with the General Conference education director and ten division leaders. The study included twelve divisions: East-Central Africa, Euro-Africa, Inter-American, North American, Northern Asia-Pacific, South American, South Pacific, Southern Africa-Indian Ocean, Southern Asia, Southern Asia-Pacific, Trans-European, and West-Central Africa. No Seventh-day Adventist secondary schools were operating in the Euro-Asia Division at the time of this study.

From these interviews (see questions in Appendix A) it became evident that 1) Bible curriculum and resources to prepare Adventist secondary teachers to integrate faith in learning (IFL) were priority concerns for most leaders, and 2) knowledge of what resources were available, used and needed to teach from the Adventist worldview at the secondary level was limited. Findings from the first global secondary teacher survey conducted by Paul Brantley (2003) provided insights and raised additional questions.

As a result, the research team decided to use a secondary teacher survey to investigate the following questions:

1. How do Adventist secondary teachers perceive the philosophy of integrating faith in learning? How, if at all, are they practicing this Adventist worldview?
2. To what extent are secondary teachers aware of available Adventist curriculum resources?
3. Which of these faith-integrating resources, if any, do secondary teachers actually use?
4. What kinds of resources, ideas and support are considered useful in integrating faith and learning in the classroom? How effective are resources actually used perceived to be?
5. What factors negatively impact teaching from an Adventist world view?
6. How can the needed resources best be delivered to Adventist secondary schools?

7. How have resource awareness, usage and needs changed since the first global survey of high school teachers in 1997?

Research Method

Population

The objective of this research was to determine secondary teachers' perceptions of how to integrate faith in learning, and to determine the availability and use of resources that facilitate teaching from an Adventist worldview. As a result, all secondary teachers within the Seventh-day Adventist education system formed the population from which a sample was taken.

From this population individual schools were selected. Every second high school from those listed in the Seventh-day Adventist Yearbook online at AdventistDirectory.org as of April 2005 was invited to participate in the survey. A total of 265 schools were included. The Seventh-day Adventist Yearbook does not provide information on the number of teachers employed at individual schools hence we cannot identify how many teachers were in the sample.

Those teachers who had access to the internet completed their surveys online; others completed email or paper versions. Ten surveys were mailed to each school without an email address, and the principal was requested to copy surveys for all teachers, or if this was not feasible, to randomly select at least one teacher per subject area to participate.

The Instrument

Responses from interviews (Appendix A) with ten division directors provided the researchers with an understanding of priority issues to be investigated and guided the development of the research questions in this needs assessment of Adventist secondary education. One survey instrument, with five sections (A – E) namely; background information, integrating faith in learning, resource availability, resource use, and problems in integrating faith in learning, was developed.

The researchers used Brantley's 1997 secondary teacher survey instrument to guide them in developing survey questions. In order to compare data, many questions included in the 2005 survey were identical. To enrich data, Part C, general resource availability, and Part E, problems impacting the integration of faith in learning, used three point scales rather than yes/no checkboxes used in the 1997 study. Education director interviews guided the rewording of several items and the selection of additional questions. Division and union education directors were then invited to complete the proposed survey as a pilot group. The completed instrument (Appendix B) had eighty-seven (87) items.

In 1997, two teachers from each school were randomly selected by subject area to respond. The subject options were science, history, language/literature, math and Bible. Results indicated some differences in perceptions and practices of faith integration. To answer questions about all content areas at the secondary level, the 2005 study included physical education, music and art, and business or technology; it invited all teachers in sampled schools to participate.

Division education directors advised the research team that where English, French, Spanish or Portuguese was not the first language, teachers in sampled schools could participate using one of these four languages. The online survey, in English only, was created for the sampled schools where internet access was readily available. Once the survey was made available to all participants, follow-up included as many as seven emails, a second mailing, faxes and telephone calls through March 2006. Survey responses were returned October 2005 through June 2006.

Widespread email access and strong education director support resulted in higher percentages of teacher responses for the East-Central Africa, Euro-Africa, North American, Northern Asia-Pacific, and West-Central Africa divisions. These leaders are commended for their support of this study.

Limitations

Inaccurate or incomplete phone, fax or email addresses negatively affected responses for the Inter-American, South American and Southern Asia-Pacific divisions. Although the research team sent several reminders and even delayed the date for data collection to facilitate this group, the percentage of responses from these divisions was significantly lower. Consequently, these divisions are not adequately represented in the results. This poses a problem for generalization of the study to these regions. Division and union offices of education are encouraged to keep school contact information in the Adventist yearbook updated, to facilitate future research.

The French, Portuguese, and Spanish versions of the instrument omitted the option to list 'other' teaching assignments in the item that asked for teaching assignments. The French and Portuguese versions listed two age options as 39-49 and 49-59 rather than 40-49 and 50-59 (Appendix B). These discrepancies were as a result of translation problems but presented no critical bias to the research findings.

Data Analysis

Data was collected by mail, email, fax and through the online survey instrument. All email, fax and some paper responses were manually transferred into the online survey tool. English or Spanish paper responses were scanned and coded directly into the Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS) version 14. The online data set was combined in SPSS with the scanned data. The 1997 data was included for comparative analysis.

This report includes descriptive and inferential statistical analysis of the quantitative data. Further analysis will be conducted in response to specific stakeholder questions. Qualitative data (Appendix D) was coded using emergent categories. One researcher analyzed and categorized the qualitative data, with a second reviewing the categories developed to reduce the likelihood of researcher's bias affecting the results.

Results

Designed to record only the division, union/mission, and conference/field location, no identification of the individual responding or the specific school was kept. Because the Adventist yearbook does not include the number of teachers in each school, the exact size of the secondary teacher population was not available. The number of individual responses is shown as a percentage of the 830 teachers who identified their division. The number of schools sampled within each division is shown as a percentage of the total sample of 265 schools. This provides a by-division response rate comparing the percentage of schools to the percentage of teachers who responded in that division, as shown in Table 1.

Demographics

The number of baptized Seventh-day Adventist secondary teachers decreased slightly from ninety-nine percent (98.9%) of 461 teachers surveyed in 1997 to ninety-four percent (94.4%) of 834 teachers in 2005. The gender ratio changed from sixty-six percent (66%) male in 1997 to sixty percent (60%) in 2005. Chart 1 illustrates the variation of this ratio by division.

Chart 1: Secondary Teacher Gender by Division

The percentage of secondary teachers who had been Seventh-day Adventists for over 31 years increased from 1997 to 2005 (Table 2). In the same period, the percentage of teachers who were Seventh-day Adventists for less than 20 years decreased (Table 2). A similar change occurred in teacher age (Table 3). Teachers who participated in the 2005 study were older than those who participated in the 1997 study.

The percentage of teachers who had attended higher education was almost identical in 1997 and in 2005. Recruiting and maintaining younger teachers at the secondary level may be an issue. See variations in division data in Appendix C. Further, the number of Adventist teachers who had completed training at Adventist colleges and universities declined as shown in Chart 2. But nearly three quarters (72.2%) of the 319 teachers who attended Adventist secondary schools also attended Adventist colleges for most of their undergraduate education. Seventy-one percent (71.1%) of teachers who attended non-Adventist secondary schools continued with non-Adventist tertiary education. Increased support of Adventist elementary and secondary education may be the best marketing plan for Adventist higher education.

Chart 2: Percent of Teachers Who Attended Adventist Schools & Colleges

Of the 326 teachers who attended Adventist undergraduate colleges or universities, sixty percent (60.4%) continued with graduate studies at Adventist universities. Eighty-six percent (85.5%) of teachers who attended non-Adventist undergraduate education continued in non-Adventist programs at the graduate level. Eighty-seven percent (86.6%) of teachers had a teaching degree and/or held valid certification for their region. Of the 108 who did not have a teaching degree or certification at the time of this study, sixty were working on certification.

Secondary teachers were asked to select their major teaching assignment from a list of eight options: bible, biology, business or technology, history, language or literature; math, science and chemistry; music and art, and physical education. The next question gave teachers the option to list additional assignments not included in the subject listing. Thirty teachers indicated they also had administrative, counseling, pastoral or dean responsibilities. Twenty-one teachers listed industrial art, agriculture, food service or home economics as other teaching assignments. 'Other' refers to teaching assignments teachers have in addition to their principal subject areas. Entries in the 'other' field for geography, government or economics were included with history; health or anatomy and physiology were included with biology; advanced math with math, physics and chemistry; and drama or ESL with language or literature. Chart 3 indicates secondary teacher content area involvement in both major and additional assignments.

Chart 3: Major and Additional Teaching Assignments

The percentage of respondents who taught language and literature, or math, physics or chemistry, is double those who taught any other major subject. Results vary greatly by division (tabulated in Appendix C), reflecting regional curriculum priorities.

Faith Integration Perceptions

Findings reveal that seventy-nine percent (79.2%) of teachers understood the term, ‘integration of faith in learning’. Seventy-two percent (72.2%) disagreed with the statement, ‘it is difficult for me to integrate biblical faith in the subjects I teach’. Seventy-nine percent (79.4%) believed that making conscious plans to integrate faith in learning is realistic.

Eighty-four percent (84.4%) of teachers wanted to know more about integrating faith and learning; while seventy-five percent (75.3%) of teachers would like in-service training on how to teach from the Adventist world view. This varies by division, as shown in Appendix C. Interest in training in the three divisions where Adventist teacher preparation and/or Adventist teacher certification is required was below sixty percent (41.4%-57.9%), where percentages range from seventy-three (73.3%) to ninety-five (95.3%) for the other nine divisions.

Seventy-four percent (73.9%) of teachers with a teaching degree or certification would like in-service training. Fully ten percent more (83.5%) of teachers without a teaching degree or certification indicated they would like in-service training. While eighty-five percent (85%) of teachers believed that their school administration encouraged faith integration, only forty-seven percent (46.6%) indicated that their local education office prepared them to integrate faith in their teaching. Clearly, the majority of secondary teachers is interested in putting Adventist education philosophy into practice and would welcome in-service training.

Faith Integration Practices

To what extent are secondary teachers integrating faith, and how, if at all, are they doing this? Ninety percent (89%) of teachers selected 'living a Christlike life' as the principal way they integrate faith in learning. They often discuss Christian values in the classes they teach. These findings concur with those of a recent study of 262 principals, chaplains, teachers and students in 19 South Pacific Division Adventist secondary schools. In this qualitative research, teachers most frequently cited personal example as the key strategy to teaching Christian values and ideas (Hill, 2006).

Eighty-five percent (85.4%) of teachers carried out some of their plans to integrate faith in their classes. But only fifty-eight percent (57.6%) agreed that most of the lessons they taught made specific reference to biblical ideas and themes. Understandably responses varied by major teaching assignment on this question. Table 4 shows the percentage of teachers identified within their major teaching assignment who agreed or strongly agreed that most of their lessons made specific reference to biblical ideas and themes.

Table 4: Teachers Whose Lessons Refer to Biblical Themes

Major Teaching Assignment	Percent	N
Bible	94.4	89
History	66.7	93

Biology	56.9	72
Physical Education	55.9	34
Music or Art	51.0	51
Business or Technology	46.3	67
Math, Physics or Chemistry	37.6	178

Fifty-eight percent (58.1%) of teachers were willing to share how they integrate faith in their teaching at a workshop, indicating a level of experience and willingness to assist colleagues through in-service training. Although sixty-one percent (60.9%) of teachers regularly integrate faith in classes and indicated that this year they tried exciting new approaches, responses varied by content area. Table 5 shows the number of teachers by major teaching assignment who responded to this item.

Table 5: Teachers Regularly Integrating Faith & Trying New Approaches

Major Teaching Assignment	Percent	Number
Bible	78.9	90
History	68.8	93
Language or Literature	63.5	181
Business or Technology	57.6	66
Math, Physics or Chemistry	55.4	175
Biology	50.7	75
Physical Education	46.9	32
Music or Art	46.0	50

Perceptions of what faith integration is and how to teach from an Adventist worldview were similar in both studies. Qualitative comments (Appendix D) echo South Pacific Division research findings which indicated that teachers could more clearly verbalize their Adventist world view and make more deliberate use of strategies for teaching values and ideas (Hill, 2006).

A longitudinal study of individual teachers might provide more information on how teachers progress through identified levels of deliberately implementing faith integration plans (Bouvet de Korniejczuk, 1993). Such a study could assist in the development of training curriculum and process.

Perceived Problems to Integrating a Biblical Faith

It is not always easy to teach a distinctly Adventist curriculum. Part E investigated the extent to which fifteen factors were perceived as difficulties affecting their ability to integrate faith in learning. This list included items from the 1997 survey, as well as others which division education director interview responses suggested. In 1997, a yes or no answer was recorded. In 2005, teachers selected one of three options: ‘no problem,’ ‘somewhat of a problem,’ or ‘a real problem.’

Ten of the fifteen factors were problems to fifty percent (50%) or more of teachers in 2005, as shown in Table 6. Notably, eleven of the twelve factors included in both surveys were perceived to be greater problems in 2005 than in 1997.

Lack of training in the Adventist worldview and lack of understanding of how to integrate faith were perceived as problems to two-thirds (65.5% and 63.9%) of teachers. Even higher percentages listed lack of good IFL teaching materials (73.5%) and lack of library reference materials (69%) as problems. Focus on government exams (66.9%), government control of curriculum (68.5%) and few Adventist teacher resources in a local languages (65.3%) were problems to two-thirds of teachers in all divisions other than North America. Appendix C tabulates division data for each of the fifteen factors.

Perceptions of problems changed most on three factors (italicized in Table 6 below).

Nearly two-thirds (64.8%) of teachers felt that student lack of interest in faith-integrated learning was a problem in 2005 compared to only seventeen percent (17.2%) in 1997. Lack of time was a problem to seventy percent (70.4%) of teachers in 2005, more than double the thirty percent (30.6%) in 1997. Difficulty integrating faith in a specific content area was a problem to fifty-four percent (54.2%) in 2005 compared to eleven percent (10.9%) of teachers in 1997.

Table 6: Factors Impacting Faith Integration

These findings are supported by qualitative data. When invited to share any other problem(s) not listed, eighty-seven teachers (10.4% of 837) responded with short comments. More than a quarter (25) of these indicated that the lack of information about the Adventist worldview and/or lack of dedication to integrating faith was a problem. Curriculum issues concerned ten teachers. Nine believed employment of non-Adventist teachers was a significant factor to consider. Ten percent of these respondents stated that student's attitudes towards a faith-integrating education, and lack of home support for Christian education was a real problem. Nine felt time was a real problem, with teachers responsible for many extra-curricula activities, taking on additional employment to supplement low salaries, etc. Eight named administrative issues, such as lack of support by the school principal, government restrictions, etc. as problematic. The lack of resources in local language, government examinations controlling curriculum and other general issues were reported by a few respondents, as Table 7 shows. All comments are included in Appendix D.

Availability of Resources

Part C listed ten items including technology tools to answer the research question, “How can resources best be delivered?” Secondary teachers selected ‘always,’ ‘sometimes,’ or ‘never’ in response to the question, “How often are the following teaching resources available for your use?” In 1997, teachers were asked to check resources available anytime they wished to use them in their teaching. Responses indicate that almost all resources were more readily available in 2005 than they were in 1997, as Chart 4 illustrates.

Chart 4: Availability of Resources

Availability of student texts and internet improved most. Availability of the ten resources listed in Section C (Appendix B) differed greatly by world region. Three clusters appeared, shown in Table 8 (also see by-division data in Appendix C). While nearly seventy percent (69.4%) of all teachers in 2005 had access to the internet, less than a quarter (4.9-27.3%) of teachers in four divisions had fax, email or internet access ‘sometimes’ or ‘always’. A range of 7-10 of the ten resources listed were available some or all of the time to less than one in five (10.2-19.5%) of teachers in division Cluster 1, compared to over ninety percent (90%) for divisions in Cluster 3.

Table 8: Availability of General Resource by Division

Division Cluster	Percent of 10 Resources Available	0-1	2-6	7-10
Cluster 1	DIV 4	30.6	59.2	10.2
	DIV 6	13.6	68.2	18.2
	DIV 5	16.5	69.6	13.9
	DIV 9	5.7	74.7	19.5
Cluster 2	DIV 8	9.6	42.5	47.9
	DIV 11	10	28.6	61.4
	DIV 3	0	20.6	79.4

	DIV 1	0	5.9	94.1
	DIV 12	1.2	2.3	96.5
	DIV 7	0	2.6	97.4

Divisions with limited access to computers, email and internet apparently also have limited access to other resources. However, the rapid increase in access to computers and internet in most regions suggests that these technology tools could rapidly improve resource availability if fully utilized by the General Conference, division, union and local offices of education.

Access to Faith Integration Resources

Teachers were asked which of fourteen resources (listed in Section D) they actually used to integrate a biblical faith in learning. For those used, teachers selected one of four options: 'little use,' 'somewhat useful,' 'useful,' or 'definitely useful.' More than sixty percent (61.5%) of teachers considered books on Adventist education, philosophy and values to be helpful or very helpful. Few secondary teachers use all but one item (books on Adventist education), ranked in ascending order by percentage used in Table 9 below.

Of the ten division education directors who participated in the pilot phone or email interviews, most had limited knowledge of curriculum developments in other divisions. Several were interested in finding out what was available.

Table 9: Faith Integrating Resources Used

IFL Resources	Percent	N

Teacher group(s) to share ideas about IFL	46.4	786
Person(s) who came to share ideas about IFL	48.5	782
Books on Adventist education/philosophy/values	67.3	786

While these results may be disappointing, positive change is evident. Chart 5 compares the use of items included in both the 1997 and 2005 survey. These findings suggest that future resource developments should include distribution, promotion and in-service training to best utilize the investment.

Chart 5: Change in Resource Use

How effective are used resources perceived to be? Findings reveal that three quarters (69-92%) of those who actually used the listed items rated them as helpful or very helpful. Thirty percent or less felt the used resources were not really helpful. Chart 6 shows resources in descending order of helpfulness. The North American Division Profile 2004 study reported similar findings, where those who actually used the division's curriculum guides felt they were helpful (Burton et al., 2005).

The items, 'persons who came to share IFL ideas' and 'teacher groups to share IFL ideas' were both helpful to eighty-six percent (86%) or more of teachers who had experienced this support. Mentoring and training were clearly helpful to the majority of teachers who experienced these person-to-person resources.

Chart 6: Used Resources Rated

Notably, four of the six most useful resources are publications. All of these were helpful to eighty percent or more of teachers who used them. Although used by less than a quarter of teachers in this study, technology-delivered resources (CIRCLE, IFL ideas online, and software) were helpful to three quarters (77.5%-78.9%) of teachers who actually used them. With the increase in availability of technology (see Chart 5), this result indicates that key resources could effectively be distributed via the internet and CD in future.

Eighty-five secondary teachers listed other resources that were useful in their experience integrating faith in learning (Table 11). Nearly half (36) listed the Bible and/or Ellen White books as useful resources. Nearly a quarter (20) named other Adventist publications as useful, including devotionals, Bible commentaries, Geosciences Research Institute publications, Christ in the Classroom, Voice of Prophecy and Amazing Facts, and the ADRA website. Eighteen listed Adventist colleges, conventions, AVLN online faith-integration and technology courses or faculty as helpful to their teaching from the Adventist worldview. Eleven shared devotional or spiritual nurture books, magazines and worship/devotional materials. All qualitative data is included in Appendix D.

Table 11: Available Resources Used Other than Those Listed

Qualitative Responses: Other Resources Used	Percent of 85
Bible & Spirit of Prophecy Books	42.4
Other Adventist publications	23.5
Teacher preparation	21.2
Other spiritually nurturing resources	12.9

Teachers were first asked how helpful available resources were. In the next section, teachers' were asked how useful each of these same fourteen items would be if they were available. Of those who selected 'not used' in the first section, the majority felt each item would be useful or definitely useful if available as Table 12 demonstrates.

Table 12: Perceived Usefulness of Unavailable IFL Resources

Resources Currently Unavailable, Perceived as Useful	Percent	N

Professional journals on morality, ed philosophy, faith & values	60.7	420
Books on Adventist education/philosophy/values	58.9	246
Division/Union education magazines	54.5	468

Over two-thirds (66.3%-73.9%) of teachers for whom resources were unavailable perceived textbooks, software, lesson plans, curriculum guides, presenters and teacher groups that share ideas, seminars, and websites would be helpful in purposeful Adventist education. Secondary teachers indicate that they would use resources if they were available.

Recommendations

How can the General Conference and division offices of education better assist Adventist secondary teachers in the mission of building redemption-oriented secondary schools? This study indicates that secondary teachers want to put the philosophy of Adventist education into practice, and would use more Adventist education resources if available. Despite problems noted in teaching from an Adventist worldview, teachers request training and tools to prepare themselves and their students to live the Adventist faith. The findings from this research support the following recommendations:

1. Re-examine the role of secondary education in shaping and feeding the tertiary level.¹
2. Promote the use of Adventist college/university campuses as a venue for orientation of secondary teachers to Adventist philosophy of education.
3. Link certification and credentialing of secondary teachers globally to training in the integration of faith and commitment to the practice thereof.
4. Develop and implement an IFL training-of-trainers process and curriculum such as The Act of Integrating Faith and Learning: A Pedagogical Guide (Green, Burton, Henriquez-Green, & Nwosu, 2000) or Making Adventist Schools Distinctive (Weslake, 2005).
5. Create a peer-mentoring network where division and general conference administrators, union and conference education leaders, and school principals and teachers regularly share ideas and methods to integrate faith in their sphere of service.

¹ Several findings of this study are similar to those of the Commission of Higher Education's Final Report (2005). (See www.adventistreview.org/site/1/2005-1541/CHEFinal10.7.pdf). Action plans should be considered that maximize key linkages between secondary and higher education in the implementation of the Adventist philosophy of education both in and out of the classroom.

6. Use available technology to its best advantage, given the increase in accessibility of computers and internet globally (Chart 4) and the high percentage of teachers who would use key resources if they were available (Table 12). For example:
 - a. sponsor a coordinated development of highly engaging computer-based learning packages to orient teachers to Adventist education, and
 - b. distribute Adventist education publications and teacher-created materials on CD.
7. Tighten the link between GC, division, union, and conference in the sharing and dissemination of critical learning resources in Adventist education. Discourage redundancy and ‘reinventing the wheel’. For example:
 - a. develop an on-line CIRCLE bulletin board or blog to inform educators globally of new developments and
 - b. provide an incentive to keep every school’s contact information current in the Adventist yearbook.
8. Recognize the contribution of Adventist educators and institutions nominated for their modeling of faith integration in redemptive secondary education (names in Appendix D).

2. If we look at the various levels of education (elementary, secondary, tertiary), do any other needs come to mind?
3. Does your field have any unique features that make curriculum work more or less of a challenge? How many countries are bound to government-set curricula?
4. What kind of curriculum work is going on in your field?
5. Are you aware of what curriculum development is taking place in other divisions?
6. What would you like to see happen curriculum-wise in your field?
7. How can we obtain the best response from secondary teachers in your division?
 - a. Will all teachers in your division be able to participate with a survey in English, Spanish, Portuguese or French?
 - b. How do you recommend we best reach secondary teachers? What percent can be reached by email? By fax? How many schools reliably receive mail at the yearbook published address?

An Adventist Curriculum Needs Assessment

A Global Survey of Secondary School Teachers in 2005

DIRECTIONS: Teachers hired in Adventist secondary schools are expected to teach from an Adventist world view. But do they have the resources, ideas, and support they need? This study, conducted by CIRCLE at Andrews University, will help make our world education leaders aware of what teachers need to integrate Adventist faith at the classroom level. The survey will take only a few minutes of your time. It is confidential because we want your honest thoughts. Completing this survey implies consent to use of data.
