2-2018

Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary revises Master of Divinity Program

Samantha Angeles
Andrews University, angeless@andrews.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs

Recommended Citation
Angeles, Samantha, "Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary revises Master of Divinity Program" (2018). Lake Union Herald. 10.
https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs/10

This News is brought to you for free and open access by the Lake Union Herald at Digital Commons @ Andrews University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Lake Union Herald by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Andrews University. For more information, please contact repository@andrews.edu.
EDUCATION NEWS

Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary revises Master of Divinity Program

MICHIGAN — The Seventh-day Adventist Theological Seminary of Andrews University has revised the Master of Divinity (M.Div.) program, providing a sharper focus to the degree with fewer credit hours required. The 78-credit program begins in the fall of 2018 and is designed to be completed in as little as two years by students with an undergraduate degree in theology. Students with degrees in other disciplines will follow a three-year plan to complete their M.Div.

The previous 92-credit program took three years for the average student with a theology undergraduate degree to complete. The revised M.Div. allows the same students to finish the program in less time if they have fulfilled all prerequisite courses and can demonstrate intermediate-level proficiency in biblical languages.

“I’m thrilled about our newly revised M.Div.,” said Jiří Moskala, Seminary dean. “It brings together the best in scholarship and praxis to provide a stellar biblical, theological, historical and missiological framework for our students’ future ministry. Evangelism combined with a profound knowledge of the Bible and pastoral care is the first priority in our coursework.”

The revisions to the M.Div. were shaped by extensive consultation with North American Division (NAD) advisory groups, faculty committees, administrators, students and accreditation standards with the purpose of providing an enhanced degree.

“The revised M.Div. is shorter, deeper and stronger,” said Fernando Ortiz, M.Div. program director. “Students can now fulfill their educational goals more quickly without compromising the quality of the program.”

One key aspect of the credit reductions has involved working with undergraduate schools in a Curriculum Collaboration set up by the NAD. This collaboration reviewed the learning needed by a pastor to determine which should be studied at the M.Div. level and which should be prerequisites or part of students’ post-seminary internship training. Students who have degrees in disciplines other than theology and sense a call from God to deepen their preparation for ministry will take prerequisite courses at the beginning of their M.Div. program. These essential courses will establish a solid theological and practical foundation on which their M.Div. studies can be built to prepare them for excellence in ministry.

Revisions to the M.Div. program included dividing selected classes, such as Issues in Daniel and Revelation into two courses, in order to provide students with greater depth of study and strengthen their Adventist identity. Other courses that shared similar subject matter were combined. Theological and preaching courses were diversified to equip students to meet the needs of an increasingly complex world.

“Congregational pastors, chaplains and youth pastors will be equipped to closely collaborate with our church schools, making the schools a center for their evangelistic and community activities,” said Moskala.

Attention to the Adventist health message also was a significant factor that shaped the M.Div. revisions.

“We are particularly excited about our new health and wellness course that will be taken by all M.Div. students,” said Teresa Reeve, associate dean. “Students will receive training in personal fitness and learn to bring the health message to their churches and communities.”

To allow time for exercise, spiritual life and work, along with the demands of classwork and ministry practice, the maximum number of credits allowed per semester for M.Div. students has been reduced from 16 to 14 credits. This adjustment will not only prevent academic burnout but also sets a pattern for healthy, balanced living to maximize students’ effectiveness in their future ministry.

To learn more about the M.Div. or to enroll in the program, email mdiv@andrews.edu or visit andrews.edu/mdiv.

Samantha Angeles, Seminary student writer