2006

Scripture in Memory

Robert H. Banks

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/pd

Part of the Biblical Studies Commons

Recommended Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/pd/vol11/iss4/4 heavenly realm. The question is whether the earthly practices are being used in the Bible as metaphors to help us understand theological concepts and ideas but are not intended to describe similar procedures in heaven. It is difficult to provide an answer to this question.

It is clear that the biblical writers were persuaded of the reality of the heavenly books. Hence, should we feel free to dispose of their convictions in order to appropriate only abstract ideas from the language and images they used? This may not be necessarily wrong. However, this question would have never occurred to an Israelite. Hebrew thinking does not seem to allow for the argument that earthly patterns are being used simply to convey heavenly concepts for which there is not at some level a concrete correspondence in heaven itself. This does not necessarily mean that the heavenly things have to correspond in every respect to the earthly ones. The biblical writers are clearly using human language and images to allude to a heavenly reality that cannot be fully contained in the language or in the social practices they employed to communicate their message.

The phenomenon described here is similar to the biblical tendency to pattern human things on Earth after heavenly ones. For instance, the earthly sanctuary was patterned after the heavenly. Evidently that should not be interpreted to mean that the earthly is an exact replica of the heavenly. The biblical writers were aware of the superiority of the heavenly temple in contrast to the earthly. Another example comes from the sphere of human behavior. In the Old Testament, the religious and social behavior of the Israelites was to be patterned after the heavenly one. Israelite society was expected to reflect the heavenly model: “‘Be holy; for I am holy’” (Lev. 11:44, NKJV). But the holiness of the people was a paltry reflection of the unique and magnificent holiness of God; in fact, it was a limited participation in the holiness of God.

One should not press the discontinuity between the earthly and the heavenly or the heavenly and the earthly to the point of denying the reality of the heavenly. The specific nature of the heavenly is not accessible to us, but inaccessibility should not be equated with nonexistence.

REFERENCES
3 The Great Controversy, pp. 481–484.

Jesus’ command of Scripture suggests that He took memorization very seriously.

One of the many things that captured the interest of Christ’s disciples was His fervent and consistent devotional life. The Gospels, especially Luke, illuminate the importance of prayer for Jesus. His followers were inspired by the spiritual power they had come to associate with His words and works. While His life in the Spirit stemmed from several sources, it also included His intent to store Scripture in memory. This ingredient in Christ’s spiritual life is not as explicitly described as His life of prayer, but is evident in the record of His earthly ministry.

It has been observed that the Gospels (particularly Matthew) describe Christ as the perfect representative of the people of Israel, who repeats the history of the Old Testament covenant people. God called both Israel and Christ—as the embodiment of Israel—His “servant” (Isaiah 42–53). Both similarly received the designation of God’s “Son” (Ex. 4:22; Matt. 3:17). Like Israel of old, Jesus found refuge in Egypt for His own survival. The first chapters of Matthew’s Gospel repeats the history of the Old Testament covenant people.

*Robert H. Banks, D.Min., is Senior Pastor of the Patterson Avenue Seventh-day Adventist Church, Richmond, Virginia, and Ministerial Secretary for the Potomac Conference. He has committed 612 chapters of the Bible to memory, including 27 complete books (among them Isaiah, Matthew, John, Romans, Hebrews, and Revelation). sent Jesus as retracing the steps of Israel, experiencing a “new Exodus” from Egypt after a death decree. Christ then makes a spiritual journey, crossing a figurative Red Sea at the time of His baptism. As the pillar of cloud went before Israel to lead them in the desert, so Jesus was “led up by the Spirit into the wilderness” (Matt. 4:1, NKJV). There He resided 40 days in the desert, paralleling the 40 years Israel wandered in the wilderness. As Moses proclaimed the law of God’s kingdom on Mount Sinai, so did Jesus, the great Law Giver, proclaim His spiritual kingdom on the Mount of Blessing (Matthew 5).

Jesus later selected 12 disciples as the counterpart of the 12 tribes of Israel. Notice that Jesus faced the same temptations in the desert as did Israel during their time of wandering: “appetite,” “love of the world,” and “presumption.” It’s significant that Christ recognized that passages quoted by Satan were out of their immediate context and only partially quoted (Matt. 4:6, 7; Ps. 91:11). He overcame all these temptations by quoting passages from memory from the Book of Deuteronomy. The precepts in this book, many written in the desert, had also been available to Israel in the wilderness as they struggled with temptation (Deut. 8:3; 6:13, 16). In other words, Jesus used the very same weapon available to Israel as they battled temptation. Christ had evidently, through years of careful application and study, fortified His memory in preparation for this intense battle with the adversary.

The Gospels exalt many facets of the life of the Messiah as an example for those who are His followers. The Gospels record no fewer than 43 occasions when Jesus quoted or alluded to Scripture from memory. His purpose for quoting the Scriptures seems to fall into three categories: (1) as an aid in His battle with sin, (2) to clarify a doctrinal question for His hearers, and (3) as a confirmation or clarification of His mission as the Messiah.

The Scriptures sustained Jesus during the trying ordeal at the closing hours of His life. Of the “seven last words” of Jesus on the cross, passages quoted by Jesus during the closing hours of His betrayal and crucifixion were Psalm 22:1 (Matt. 27:46); and Psalm 31:5 (Luke 23:46). Another statement, “I thirst” (John 19:28), though not a direct quote, is contextually parallel with events described in Psalm 22:15 and 69:21. In the midst of His terrible suffering, under the weight of the sins of the world, He quoted (in Aramaic) Psalm 22:1: “‘My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?’” (Matt. 27:46, NKJV). Even the last spoken words of Jesus before He died, “‘It is finished,’” were words of Scripture that He had committed to memory.

Jesus understood, from His meditation on Scripture revealing His Messianic work, that He was the new antitypical David, repeating in His life the experience of the first David. All three Old Testament texts quoted by Jesus on the cross came from the psalms of David. It is appropriate that Jesus would identify Himself with David, who had hidden the Word in His heart (Ps. 119:11). Probably no other Old Testament character declared a stronger devotion to the words of the Lord. It was David who said, “I will delight myself in Your statutes; I will not forget Your word” (Ps. 119:16, NKJV). Jesus also made this resolution, and it sustained Him in His final hours. As the Davidic Messiah, it is no wonder that Jesus armed Himself with the words of the Lord. It was David who declared a stronger devotion to the Word in his heart (Ps. 119:11). Probably no other Old Testament character was so eminently familiar with Scripture, energized Him with courage to face the crisis before Him.

The closing days of Jesus’ betrayal, trial, and passion are thematically parallel to the betrayal, deception, and hardship that the Gospels prophesy will come upon the final remnant (Matt. 10:16–18, 22–25, 40; 24:9, 10). Ellen White declares: “Today men are choosing Barabbas, and saying, Crucify Christ. They will do this in the person of His saints. They will go over the same ground as the Jewish priests and rulers did in their treatment of Christ” (Testimonies to Ministers and Gospel Workers, p. 131).

In the same manner, the people of God, before the day of the Lord, will be “like David” (Zech. 12:8). Like the Davidic Messiah, they will draw upon the storehouse of Scripture during Earth’s final conflict. The end-time generation will face a similar trial and will use the same means to overcome through the Word of God.
battled temptation. Christ had evidently, through years of careful application and study, fortified His memory in preparation for this intense battle with the adversary.

The Gospels exalt many facets of the life of the Messiah as an example for those who are His followers. The Gospels record no fewer than 43 occasions when Jesus quoted or alluded to Scripture from memory. His purpose for quoting the Scriptures seems to fall into three categories: (1) as an aid in His battle with sin, (2) to clarify a doctrinal question for His hearers, and (3) as a confirmation or clarification of His mission as the Messiah.

The Scriptures sustained Jesus during the trying ordeal at the closing hours of His life. Of the “seven last words” of Jesus on the cross, passages quoted by Jesus during the closing hours of His betrayal and crucifixion were Psalm 22:1 (Matt. 27:46); and Psalm 31:5 (Luke 23:46). Another statement, “I thirst” (John 19:28), though not a direct quote, is contextually parallel with events described in Psalm 22:15 and 69:21. In the midst of His terrible suffering, under the weight of the sins of the world, He quoted (in Aramaic) Psalm 22:1: “‘My God, My God, why have You forsaken Me?’” (Matt. 27:46, NKJV). Even the last spoken words of Jesus before He died, “‘It is finished,’” were words of Scripture that He had committed to memory.

Jesus understood, from His meditation on Scripture revealing His Messianic work, that He was the new antitypical David, repeating in His life the experience of the first David. All three Old Testament texts quoted by Jesus on the cross came from the psalms of David. It is appropriate that Jesus would identify Himself with David, who had hidden the Word in His heart (Ps. 119:11). Probably no other Old Testament character declared a stronger devotion to the words of the Lord. It was David who said, “I will delight myself in Your statutes; I will not forget Your word” (Ps. 119:16, NKJV). Jesus also made this resolution, and it sustained Him in His final hours. As the Davidic Messiah, it is no wonder that Jesus armed Himself with the words of the Lord. It was David who declared a stronger devotion to the Word of God. He gained encouragement as He witnessed how the events described in the Psalm so closely paralleled events happening before His eyes.

The Gospel narratives contain additional parallels with the experience of David in the Psalms: They mocked Christ on the cross (Ps. 22:7; Matt. 27:39). The tormentors tempted Him to deliver Himself (Ps. 22:8; Matt. 27:43). Christ suffered great thirst on the cross (Ps. 22:15; John 19:28). His hands and feet were pierced (Ps. 22:16. His garments were parted and taken by casting lots (Ps. 22:18; Matt 27:35). The Savior’s naked faith, hanging on the words of Scripture, energized Him with courage to face the crisis before Him.

The closing days of Jesus’ betrayal, trial, and passion are thematically parallel to the betrayal, deception, and hardship that the Gospels prophesy will come upon the final remnant (Matt. 10:16–18, 22–25, 40; 24:9, 10). Ellen White declares: “Today men are choosing Barabbas, and saying, Crucify Christ. They will do this in the person of His saints. They will go over the same ground as the Jewish priests and rulers did in their treatment of Christ” (Testimonies to Ministers and Gospel Workers, p. 131).

In the same manner, the people of God, before the day of the Lord, will be “like David” (Zech. 12:8). Like the Davidic Messiah, they will draw upon the storehouse of Scripture during Earth’s final conflict. The end-time generation will face a similar trial and will use the same means to overcome through the Word of God.