3-2015

A Living Faith

Aldar Nõmmik

Andrews University

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs

Part of the Religious Thought, Theology and Philosophy of Religion Commons

Recommended Citation

https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs/61

This Student Stories is brought to you for free and open access by the Lake Union Herald at Digital Commons @ Andrews University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Lake Union Herald by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Andrews University. For more information, please contact repository@andrews.edu.
Why did I stay strong in my faith? Why am I not part of the masses of young people who have left the church and faith? It’s not because I have no doubts — I do — nor is it because I have intellectually waterproofed my beliefs — I haven’t.

In the midst of all the hazardous factors that should have destroyed my faith, there was one factor that trumped them all: the faith of my parents and grandparents. These were and are men and women who were willing to be denied a college diploma rather than deny faith and quit the church; willing to be imprisoned and sent to Siberia rather than break the Sabbath commandment; willing to give up a well-paying job in order to answer the call to ministry; willing to be mistreated rather than curse God; willing to hunger in order to pay tithe and offerings.

Imprisonment, financial predicament, mistreatment and lack of college education sound terrible, and are commonly deemed ingredients of a failed life. Yet, what I saw and experienced was the opposite — a blessed life.

Where people denied, God provided — abundantly. Every single time. I couldn’t then and cannot now deny that theirs was and is life that can be deemed blessed. Everywhere else I looked as a young boy, I saw reasons to deny faith; but when I looked at my parents’ and grandparents’ life, I saw reasons to affirm faith.

A massive research about the spirituality of American teenagers — the National Study of Youth and Religion — found that “parents matter most in shaping the religious lives of their children.”2 We can put our kids through the best Christian schools and take them to the most vibrant churches in the nation, but if we don’t live the faith, will it be enough?

The mere presence and rituals of the sanctuary were not enough to prevent a generation of Israelites who did not know the Lord or the work that he had done for Israel (Judges 2:10 ESV) from rising up after Joshua’s death. Perhaps this happened because the previous generation failed to fulfill God’s instruction to live the Torah at every moment of existence in whatever circumstances, especially at home (see Deuteronomy 6:4–9).

Aldar Nõmmik, 28, is a member of the Niles Westside Church in Michigan. He attends Andrews University where he is a senior theology major.
