5-2012

AA Teaches Compassion in Action

Steven Atkins
Andrews Academy

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs

Recommended Citation
Atkins, Steven, "AA Teaches Compassion in Action" (2012). Lake Union Herald. 267.
https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs/267

This News is brought to you for free and open access by the Lake Union Herald at Digital Commons @ Andrews University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Lake Union Herald by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Andrews University. For more information, please contact repository@andrews.edu.
[EDUCATION NEWS]

AA teaches compassion in action

Michigan—For those who have not experienced Seventh-day Adventist high school education, one may think it is similar to a public school experience with the addition of Bible classes and worships. But the Andrews Academy school experience, as in other SDA schools, includes the integration of faith in every aspect of the school experience.

In my biology class, we have two textbooks: a biology book and God’s book, the Bible. As we discover the intricacies of biology, we also discover the intricacies of why and how God wants us to live as Christians, how He created us, and biblical reasoning on ethical issues as they relate to science.

Andrews Academy students also enjoy many social activities together. It may be the Student Association weekend camping trip that is focused around a spiritual theme or going out in small groups to help our community.

Our service philosophy is based on Matthew 25:31–40: “Whatever you did for one of the least of these brothers and sisters of mine, you did for me” (v. 40 NIV). We teach that we are not only to treat others as we would want to be treated, but treat others as if they were Christ Jesus Himself. Service is “compassion in action.”

On community service day, the school day began with a devotional thought focusing on Christ’s love and deep compassion for those in need. Students were encouraged to work hard — not to please people (as in the other students or their teacher) but God, and to realize that God calls them to be a light to the world. As Christians, our diligent, hard work is for the glory of God and a way to help bring others to Christ.

When Christian compassion is incorporated into the curricular and co-curricular activities effectively, students enjoy these experiences and create good memories. When the seniors returned from their five-day senior trip, I was pleasantly surprised with how many commented that the best part of the trip was community service day!

The Andrews Academy Student Association plans various vespers programs for the school. This past Christmas they organized a Friday evening caroling vespers at a nearby nursing facility. One student’s comment reflected what many others expressed: “It was a lot of fun; the people there were really enjoying it. A number of them came out to say, ‘Hi,’ some gave chocolates, and gave us Merry Christmas hugs!” The Lord worked through this activity to intervene not only in the lives of the residents but in the lives of the students as well.

The Student Association Children’s Christmas Party is designed to help academy students grow in the spirit of giving during the Christmas season. The students sign up in groups of two to four to sponsor a child for the party. Various needy children from the community are invited for the evening. As the children arrive, the festive evening commences. The children and students draw Christmas pictures on their tables as the development of their relationship begins. I see God working in the lives of the little children as well as the “big” ones. I see smiles all around.

You often hear of schools that build school spirit, school pride and their identity through their sports teams. The success of their athletic department is central. At Andrews Academy, identity and school spirit is built on broader and what faculty and staff feel are more important things. Living out Christ’s love through service is an
School recognized for excellence

Indiana—Pleasantview Christian School is known for its outstanding childhood education program. “We don’t do any [commercial] advertising. Everything is word-of-mouth,” said Michele McCaw, school principal and daycare director. “With 12 employees and 51 kids, we are full.”

Pleasantview and the Lafayette Church’s Child Care Ministry recently combined to create a glowing picture of Christian quality. “It is the best school I have found,” Becky Morales said. “I had Cece in a Montessori school, but they weren’t really teaching her anything. I pulled her out and brought her here. The teachers at Pleasantview are kind, helpful and far more involved with the kids. They are in tune with what the kids are feeling as they learn. Their curriculum — it’s fantastic! Their teaching about the Bible is also a plus. I [expect] Cece will be here until they run out of grades for her to take.”

With the growth of the school and the merger of school and daycare, Pleasantview needed new rooms. “We needed one room for ten two-year-olds and two rooms for 18 children in pre-K,” McCaw said. “There was no way the church could come up with the money.” Pleasantview received a $10,000 grant from The McAllister Foundation, which gives to high-profile educators such as Purdue and Ivy Tech. In 2006, The McAllister Foundation gave Pleasantview $40,000 for new playground equipment.

“We never know when the state will come to inspect,” said McCaw. “Last time they visited, they pulled me aside and said, ‘I can’t find anything to write you up on. It’s one of the cleanest places and filled with beautiful color for the kids!’” Five years ago, the inspector brought five other inspectors to show them a top-notch daycare.

Since 1995, McCaw and her husband have cared for the reputable quality in Pleasantview. Almost immediately after joining the Lafayette Church, she was placed on the church board. “They mentioned a preschool, but thought they would ‘can’ the idea because nobody was interested in leading the project,” McCaw said. “I left the meeting thinking, I can’t do this. Why would I ever volunteer to take this on? After getting home, I asked my husband, ‘What would you think if I taught preschool?’

“After thinking about it, he said, ‘If you can find someone to support you so you’re not doing it alone, then I, too, will support you.’”

Would you be willing to help?” McKaw asked a neighbor.

“It was the right person, at the right time and place, because she easily answered, ‘Sure!’” McCaw said.

“The church board found an addition to our team, Gayl Stevens, who worked at a daycare. Gayl became the teacher, and we were assistants. We knocked out walls, added rooms and added a daycare on the side,” McCaw recalled.

That summer, McCaw and her husband funded getting the rooms ready for students. They laid carpet and tiles, and had the daycare painted.

The first year there were just five students in the elementary school, but their team’s standard of excellence has paid off. In 12 years, Pleasantview has grown more than ten times its original size, and has built a strong ministry that shows a picture of Jesus to the community, church and home.

For more information, see http://www.pleasantview.us or email pleasantview.school@yahoo.com.

Steven Atkins, science teacher, Andrews Academy, with his wife, Alice Atkins

Visit www.LakeUnionHerald.org