

10-2009

Dispensers of Hope

Susan E. Murray
Andrews University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs>

Part of the Social and Behavioral Sciences Commons

---

Recommended Citation

Murray, Susan E., "Dispensers of Hope" (2009). Lake Union Herald. 498.
<https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs/498>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Lake Union Herald at Digital Commons @ Andrews University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Lake Union Herald by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Andrews University. For more information, please contact repository@andrews.edu.

Dispensers of Hope

BY SUSAN E. MURRAY

An important gift we can give our teens is to teach them about the concept of balcony people. Balcony people are those who, living and dead, show us we can live above the petty and discordant levels of life and who give us hope, suggests Ross Campbell, author of How to Really Love Your Teen. Balcony people are those who we can trust wholeheartedly and admire. They are the ones we know will love us no matter what.

Of course, we want to be balcony people for our children, and we can be. However, teens are very sensitive to pessimism, especially from their parents. Sometimes we are pessimistic about our children in one way or another, in addition to being pre-occupied with our own personal challenges. As parents, we are sometimes puzzled about what our teens really need from us.

© 2008 Jupiterimages Corporation

coaches or family friends. God has placed so many among us who can be balcony people for our children.

First, we need to build confidence and trust in our children's lives so they can be open to the influence of other positive people. We need to be sure that our children are in environments where they can come to really know other

Our young people need balcony people to counter the cellar voices that come from the "basement" of their lives ... rash temper, boiling anger, vindictive feelings. Cellar voices also come from the effects of those around them who, because of their own guilt, frustration, pent up hostility and low self-esteem, cut others down and tell them how bad the world really is.

An important aspect of parenting is to prepare children for life outside the home, to introduce people and experiences that broaden children's horizons and introduce them to their own abilities, those who can assist them in developing skills to get along in the world. One way to do this is to be sure they have others, outside the family, to whom they can look to for inspiration and instruction, and whom they can trust. These could be called balcony people.

And where are the best places to find balcony people for our children? They may be relatives, neighbors, those in our church congregations, teachers, school administrators, adults and develop relationships with them. They also need to understand, from a Biblical perspective, that there have always been people who are loyal to God's Word and who have served Him. During family worship, exploring verses such as Romans 8:28, Isaiah 41:10 and Psalms 34:19 can be a powerful part of this journey. Hebrews 11 is a roll call of people who proved that faith is workable in spite of circumstances and that life can have meaning any time in history.

Most of us learn from our own experiences, but it takes a wise person to learn from the experiences of others. Our teens face an uncertain world. They need hope, confidence, courage, moral strength and a sense of responsibility. Balcony people can provide these things. They are the dispensers of hope in an uncertain world.

---

Susan Murray is an associate professor of family studies who teaches behavioral science and social work at Andrews University. She is a certified family life educator and a licensed marriage and family therapist.