

Andrews University

Digital Commons @ Andrews University

Lake Union Herald

Lake Union Herald

7-2004

Teacher in the Spotlight

Bjorn Karlman,
Andrews University

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs>

Part of the Nursing Commons

Recommended Citation

Karlman,, Bjorn, "Teacher in the Spotlight" (2004). Lake Union Herald. 715.
<https://digitalcommons.andrews.edu/luh-pubs/715>

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Lake Union Herald at Digital Commons @ Andrews University. It has been accepted for inclusion in Lake Union Herald by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Andrews University. For more information, please contact repository@andrews.edu.

Jesus (portrayed by Jay Oetman) is crucified.

Andrews University's Passion

The second annual Easter Passion Play at Andrews University, Apr. 10–11, drew a record crowd of about 9,500 visitors. The play depicted stories from the ministry, death, and resurrection of Jesus. But it was much more than just stories about forgiving the woman caught in adultery, or Christ's anguish in the Garden of Gethsemane, or even the glory of the resurrection. There were also stories about the people that Christ touched as a result of viewing the Passion Play.

There was the woman who had left the church

He is risen! (Kareem Shaw as Jesus)

and then decided to rededicate her life, and now her husband is having Bible studies as well. The student who learned that he had to be torn down for Christ to be built up. And the many who attended and wrote comments in the guest book after the play, such as:

"This was one of the most memorable experiences of my life!" and "I was caught up as if I had been there, feeling everything!"

Christ was uplifted, and that is Andrews University's passion!

For more, visit <http://passionplay.andrews.edu>.

Katie Shaw, news writer

Teacher in the Spotlight

Nancy Carter

Sit down and talk to Nancy Carter and you get the feeling that you are talking to a favorite aunt. She smiles, she tells you stories, and she's one of those people you know you can go to for advice. So it fits that, in addition to being assistant professor of nursing at Andrews University, she serves as academic advisor to a number of seniors. "I think I'm pretty flexible. I know that by the time they get to me they're totally stressed out!"

"Ever since I was a very little girl, all I ever wanted to be was a nurse," said Carter. The interest led to her obtaining an undergraduate degree in nursing at Andrews. "My true love has always been public health nursing," said Carter who later pursued post-graduate studies in community health nursing at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. In addition to her studies, she worked at two hospitals as well as the Berrien County Health Department (Mich.) and the home health organization, Health Care at Home, before she began teaching at Andrews in 1983.

Carter has two sons, Michael, 24, and Elliot, 18. Perhaps it is her motherly instinct that makes her so keen on helping students lead a happy life. To her, loving God is an important part of living such a life. "I think sometimes we get so caught up that we really don't find time to just spend with the Lord," she said. Carter also wants her students to be happy professionally. "I want people to choose a career they will really love." She tries to ensure that the seniors she advises have a healthy, hassle-free start to their careers.

When she's not working at Andrews, Carter keeps herself busy with a number of things. She can often be found exercising in her spare time. In addition, she has a small interior decorating business, called Decorating Dames, that she runs with some friends. Perhaps most interestingly, she builds miniature dollhouses as a hobby. She also enjoys spending time with her husband, Spencer, associate dean of the men's residence halls at Andrews.

Bjorn Karlman, student news writer