A mission for Christ

For the Class of 1963, homecoming weekend at Andrews University brought with it blue skies, fond memories and a special mission. As the 50-year class, the graduates of 1963 wanted to do something special to honor Andrews and current students.

Many of the '63 classmates have dedicated their lives to service for the Lord, so when it came to choosing a class gift, the vote was unanimous: an endowed scholarship fund to help aviation students in the mission pilot program. This scholarship would provide support for students who have completed training and choose to serve in mission assignments. The cost of pilot training and proper certification can be upwards of $50,000, which prevents many students from pursuing their dream of becoming mission pilots after graduation, as they instead seek to pay off their extensive debt. This scholarship would help provide loan relief to graduates of the program and allow more students to choose the path toward which they feel God is calling them.

Aviation is an essential part of mission work, as pilots are able to transport missionaries, supplies and equipment around the world. Additionally, air evacuation of sick or wounded patients is of critical importance in the mission field.

The Class of 1963 is establishing an endowed scholarship fund to help aviation students in the mission pilot program at Andrews University.

The class of 1963 hopes to raise $25,000 toward this scholarship, and they would love your help in doing so. They have currently raised $6,486, and thanks to an anonymous donor, every gift (up to a total of $12,500) will be matched. This means the Class of '63 only needs $6,014 more to make this scholarship a reality.
