Scholarship recipients say "thank-you"

Forty student scholarship recipients met with 60 scholarship donors for the third annual Andrews University Endowment Appreciation Brunch. Held November 4, 2001, on the campus, the brunch provides a once-per-year opportunity for student recipients and endowment and scholarship donors to meet one another and for the students to show their appreciation to the donors. "In these uncertain times, this event helps to bring a sense of community by pairing the students with the donors who started or contribute to these endowments and scholarships," explained Sallie Alger, director of development of major gifts and coordinator of the brunch. "It helps begin a relationship that could last over time."

This year's brunch included student speakers who shared what receiving their scholarships meant to them. "Several attendees commented on how sincere, how poised, and how articulate the student presenters were," said Mary Nell Rosenboom, development office administrative assistant. "At least one student speaker made the comment that when she gets to a point in her career where she can, she intends to help students as she has been helped." Alger added that by having testimonies from both recipients and donors, each group could understand philanthropy from a little different perspective and grow from that knowledge.
